Award Activity

Host institutions welcome scholars to teach undergraduate or graduate level courses, conduct research, or carry out a combination of teaching and research activities.

For proposals that include a teaching component, applicants should suggest courses for consideration in their proposal based on their expertise and experience. The typical Algerian university class is generally two hours long, meets once per week, and is comprised of an average of 60-150 students per class. Applicants should expect to teach 6 to 10 hours per week. Activities and courses will be finalized in consultation with the U.S. Embassy and host institution. Researchers will be expected to teach a 4 to 6 hours class per semester at the very least. Algeria can be a very rewarding teaching experience for motivated, flexible, and adventurous scholars.

While research-only proposals are welcomed, grantees may be asked to teach at least one course. This will be determined at a later stage after selection.

More information about teaching and/or research proposals available here ^[1].

Award Length

3-10 months

Award Dates

Grants typically begin in October. If possible, grantees are encouraged to arrive mid-September to participate in the in-country orientation, finalize lodging arrangements and settle-in, and prepare for the academic year.

Teaching components must correspond with the length of the Algerian academic semester. The academic year in Algeria is from October to July, with administrators reporting in September, and includes three terms: October through December, January through March, and April through early-July. There are two two-week breaks in the winter and spring, and the calendar may be adjusted around Islamic holidays. Applicants applying for a 10-month grant will need to teach three full semesters.

Flex Option

Yes

Flex Description

The Flex Award is designed for scholars who require multiple visits to the host country. This option allows grants to be conducted over two or three short segments, preferably during the fall and/or spring semesters. Interested applicants should clearly indicate plans for Flex in their project statement, including a project timeline. Flex grantees may be asked to give public talks, mentor students, and otherwise engage with the host-country academic community.

Flex grant parameters:

- Minimum length of the total grant is four months and the maximum is six months;
- Minimum length for any grant segment is one month and the maximum is three months;
- Applicants may propose only one, one-month segment; and,
- Grant segments may be spread over two consecutive years.

Recruitment Priorities (INTERNAL ONLY)

We want to increase the number of applicants we can consider and for this reason have increased the flexibility of our requirements. However, the Algerians will not accept researchers who write on sensitive political topics. For this reason, we will want to vet and possibly interview research applicants at post before we agree to give them awards. Note: research topics are subject to approval by the Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research and host institutions. Preferred disciplines: Agriculture American History American Civilization American Literature American Studies Biological Sciences Computer Science Creative Writing Engineering Environmental Sciences Mathematics Entrepreneurship program, Business, Marketing and Management
