Award Activity

Teach, conduct research or propose a project combining both activities.

For projects that incorporate a teaching element, applicants will be expected to teach one to two regular undergraduate and graduate courses per semester. Regular course meets usually once a week for 90 minutes. Further, the grantee may be asked to oversee student theses and dissertations, and assist with curriculum and program development.

Professional projects may include visits to organizations in the applicant's professional field, practical experience in day-to-day operations, public lectures, or other appropriate professional activities. Applicant's proposals for this grant activity should include a concrete description of the planned activities during the grant period and an explanation of the expected benefits for the applicant, his/her professional field, and host community/organization.

For professional projects, qualifying terminal degree to be consulted with the Commission at fulbright@fulbright.cz ^[1].

Special Award Benefits

September Orientation and Mid-year conference: Orientation brings new U.S. Fulbright scholars in the Czech Republic together for a four-day program in Prague, the capital of the Czech Republic. Local costs (accommodations, meals, activities, local travel) are paid for by Fulbright Commission. The same model applies for the Mid-year Conference held at the end of January. The Mid-year conference serves also as Orientation for grantees coming for Spring semester and brings together all grantees present in the country.

In-country and Inter-country lecturing program: The Fulbright Commission reimburses in-country travel costs for lecturing at Czech academic institutions and enables access to Fulbright inter-country lecturing program within Europe.

Language Proficiency Requirements

None, English is sufficient. However, feasibility of conducting the project must be demonstrated in the project statement.
