Award Activity

Responsibilities of combined Teaching / Research awards are evenly divided between activities (50% teaching; 50% research). Activities may be organized by semester (1-semester teaching; 1-semester research) or carried out simultaneously. Teaching / Research Scholars should expect to teach approximately two undergraduate or graduate courses in their discipline during the grant period.

Scholars on Teaching awards can expect to teach approximately three undergraduate or graduate courses.

Teaching activities may include co-teaching one or more courses with a faculty member from the host institution. Grantees will also advise student theses and contribute to curriculum planning and program evaluation. They may be invited to conduct professional development workshops for advanced graduate students or junior faculty.

When possible, graduate student participation in research activities is encouraged (e.g. assisting with field research in rural areas). Research collaboration among faculty is not required.
Award Length
10 months

Award Dates
A grant length is typically 10 months, beginning in February or in August. However, grant start dates can be flexible and should be determined based on academic schedules at host university, research plans, and personal circumstances.
