Award Activity

The scholar would be invited to engage in discussion with faculty and postgraduate students, exploring pioneering opportunities for increasing research impact with diverse audiences and examining new methods of research dissemination and research led/informed teaching. The Scholar would be encouraged to deliver events (lectures, seminars, workshops etc.) exploring research impact, external/public engagement, and innovative forms of research dissemination and research led teaching. The Scholar would also be encouraged to provide one-to-one meetings with staff and students who are seeking to increase the impact of their research through innovative forms of dissemination and incorporate this research into their curricula. Activities would consist of approximately two to four hours per week and would be aimed at staff and graduate students. Scholars will be asked to give public talks, mentor students, and otherwise engage with the host community, in addition to their primary research or teaching activities.

For researchers in the Arts, Humanities, and Social Sciences (AHSS) traditional mono-dimensional forms of research dissemination are increasingly expected to be accompanied by innovative cross disciplinary methods aimed at non-academic audiences. With a view to encouraging engagement with the local non-academic community as well as increasing impact with relevant public and private institutions, UCC prioritises the notion that the University is in the community, of the community and for the community. As a result researchers are encouraged to consider how their work might be disseminated in more accessible and digestible ways leading to greater impact with a wider audience. Mirroring this, through their teaching they aim to ensure our students are not just consumers of research throughout their learning careers but are creators, evaluators and communicators of knowledge as global citizens both in their area of expertise, but also more broadly as members of their local community.
